Course content

The course illustrates different perspectives on upbringing in relation to social, cultural and social change. The covers how the socialisation process (in, for example, school and family) has changed over time and place in relation to concepts such as class migration and phase of life. The focus is on childhood and youth. Socialisation processes are covered in relation to the living conditions and identity forming of individuals and groups. The course also gives perspectives on how popular culture manifests as part of socialisation.
