Intended learning outcomes

On completion of the course, the student should, at a basic level, be able to

- account for the special character of the legal argumentation,
- account for the relationship between value theory and legal argumentation,
- demonstrate knowledge of the structure of the legislative process and products at different points,
- demonstrate knowledge of where judicial material can be found with the help of information technology,
- use both legal working material, for example legal rules and preparations, and legal practice,
- correctly refer to relevant judicial material,
- demonstrate legal argumentation ability,
- identify and analyse underlying basic assumptions in legal argumentation,
- reflect on conclusions of results from both interpretation of the law and case analysis as adjudication.
- account for the fundamental features of the European legal tradition and in Swedish constitutional history.

Course content

The legal method part of the course contains lectures about division of areas of law, the structure and the legal sources of the legislative process, as well as exercises to utilise a library and there occurring aids, such as classification system, register, bibliographies and searching in databases.

The legal theory part of the course covers questions about interpretation of legal sources and questions about the role of ethics in legal argumentation. Also studied is environment law and positivistic theories of the law as well as the state and sovereignty concept, the justice concept in classical and modern discussion. This part provides insights in legal history concerning the above mentioned questions.

Teaching and working methods

The teaching partly takes the form of lectures, partly the form of seminars. The lectures supplement the reading list. The student should write a minor essay on a subject given by the teacher before every second seminar, and have prepared a review of a minor essay before every second seminar. The writing and preparation of the public discussion takes place with other students in small groups. At least one minor essay is written individually, however, and a minor essay is prepared for an individual public discussion. The student is also expected to study independently, individually or in groups.

Examination

The course is examined through active participation in the seminars and through writing and review of a minor essay for these, and through a written examination.

Students failing an exam covering either the entire course or part of the course twice are entitled to have a new examiner appointed for the reexamination.

Students who have passed an examination may not retake it in order to improve their grades.

Grades

Three-grade scale, U, G, VG

Other information

Planning and implementation of a course must take its starting point in the wording of the syllabus. The course evaluation included in each course must therefore take up the question how well the course agrees with the syllabus. The course is carried out in such a way that both men's and women's experience and knowledge is made visible and developed.
